

What Can Logos Max Do?

Logos Max provides students with a professional biblical research environment in which their Bible, commentaries, dictionaries, lexicons, theological works, original-language resources, notes, searches, and research tools work together.

Max is Logos's highest subscription tier. Logos describes it as designed for “language study & research” and specifically identifies academic-paper and sermon writing among its intended uses.

The biggest benefits fall into several areas:

- Advanced original-language study. Max provides the highest level of Greek and Hebrew functionality, including advanced tools for studying grammar, syntax, words, and the structure of the biblical text. This is probably the strongest reason for a seminary to favor Max rather than Premium or Pro.
- A substantial subscription library. Logos says subscriptions provide roughly 250–600+ books depending upon tier, and Max includes the largest collection. These resources supplement books the student already owns.
- Smart Search. Instead of needing to know complicated Logos search syntax, students can search using ordinary language. Logos searches its resources conceptually rather than merely looking for exact words. This could be enormously helpful for students learning theological research.
- Study Assistant. Students can ask research questions in natural language and receive answers drawing upon trusted resources in Logos, with the ability to ask follow-up questions.
- AI-assisted summaries. Logos can summarize articles or chapters and can summarize search results, which is useful for determining whether a resource warrants closer reading. I would teach students to use this as a research triage tool, not as a replacement for actually reading important sources.
- Sermon preparation tools. Max includes Sermon Assistant, which can generate starter ideas for outlines, illustrations, applications, and discussion questions. It also includes access to Logos Sermons.
- Research and writing capabilities. The desktop version includes bibliography tools, passage guides, word-study tools, morphological and syntax searching, reverse interlinears, notes, workflows, text comparison, visual filters, and numerous other research functions.
- More AI capacity. This is an easily overlooked difference. Max receives three times the monthly AI credits of Premium; Pro receives twice Premium's allocation. The credits support Smart Search, Study Assistant, summaries, Sermon Assistant, translation, and related AI functions.

There are also some surprisingly valuable extras. Subscribers receive 5% off most Logos purchases, an additional free book each month, access to selected Mobile Ed courses, and Pro/Max subscribers earn an annual reward coupon
